

Leptidea, a generic homonym.

By JIŘÍ PACLT.

The notes in the present paper deal with two insects, a lepidopteron and a coleopteron, for which Billberg (1820) and Mulsant (1839) used the same name Leptidea.

The former author made the genus Leptidea to receive a species of the family Pierididae described originally by Linné as Papilio (Danaus) sinapis (Syst. Nat., ed. X, p. 468, 1758), and occurring commonly in our Swedish fauna (for this see: Lit. no. 1). In regard to further notes on the literature, I refer the reader to the work Talbot's (Lit. no. 6).

Mulsant's genus belongs on the other hand in the family Cerambycidae (Coleoptera). It is represented by the South European species brevipennis of the same author (see: Lit. no. 3), a longicorn injurious to osier and damaging various products (e.g. cotton, tobacco) transported in wickerbaskets. The economical value of this insect is pointed out by many writers (Lit. no. 2, 4, 5, 7). In recent years extensive researches Zacher's (Mitt. Gesellsch. Vorratsschutz; 1943, 1944) have explained in details some forms of its life in relation to environment; the latter fact, however, may prove an importance of this longicorn in applied entomology.

It is therefore to regret that the existing name Leptidea Mulsant, according to the Rules of Nomenclature, cannot be used in future owing to Leptidea Billberg.

Deuteroleptidea n. n. for Leptidea E. Mulsant in Mulsant & Rey, Hist. Col. France-Longic., p. 105 (1839), not Leptidea G. J. Billberg, Enum. Ins., p. 76 (1820).

Generotypes: Leptidea Billb.-sinapis L., Deuteroleptidea m.-brevipennis Muls.

The title in the present paper deals with two genera, a lepidopteran and a coleopteran, for which Billberg (1805) and Mulsant (1825) used the same name Aphana.

The former author named the genus Aphana to refer to species of the family Pieridae described originally by Linnaeus as Pieris (Linnaeus 1758) (Syn. Zool. ed. X, p. 468, 1758) and extending commonly in our Swedish fauna (for this see Linnaeus 1758, in regard to further notes on the nomenclature I refer the reader to the work "Entom. Scand. no. 6").

Mulsant's genus belongs on the other hand to the family Cossidae (Cossidae). It is represented by the south European species Aphana of the same author (see Linnaeus 1758, in regard to further notes and changing various points, e.g. colour, habitat, transported in winter, etc.). The economic value of this insect is pointed out by many writers (Linnaeus 1758, 1760, 1761, 1762, 1763, 1764, 1765, 1766, 1767, 1768, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772, 1773, 1774, 1775, 1776, 1777, 1778, 1779,
